Dear Jeanette,

I would like to express my great appreciation for your visit to our LIS 541 class, Information Needs in the Humanities, on May 19th. Our students are always eager to hear from someone who can "tell it as it is". In your presentation and subsequent discussion, we learned a great deal about the nature of images as information, about practical and conceptual issues associated with their collection, organization and use, and about professional and political realities associated with their management. It was a very good idea to use your own research activities to illustrate real life problems that a serious information seeker encounters in investigating the information contained in visual images. I can't recall a time when a presentation in this course was so effective in conveying the essence of information in the visual realm. Thank you very much for so effectively sharing your special knowledge with our class.

Cordially,

Jerold Nelson
Assistant Professor
