

Family Group Sheets

The "family group sheet" is the genealogist's standard record keeping device, and although it may be a little foreign to a non-genealogist, it is concise and complete. The main use of family group sheets is to show the vital data of birth, marriage and death in detail and the source of that information. The individual chapters in this book do not include all the vital data, such as the exact date, the county, the cemetery, etc.; but all of what the authors know of a family is in the family group sheets. If some information, such as a birth date is not included in these group sheets, it simply means we do not know it.

Since it would be impractical to include group sheets for all the generations, we have chosen to provide them for only the latest five generations of the Hannah line.

An important part of the family group sheets are "notes" about each individual. The notes, as used in these group sheets, show primarily the source of the information about that person - what document, book, public record, or other source where the vital data was found. They include how we know of a person's birthplace and date, a couple's marriage date and place, a person's death date and place, and may include other information such as where and when they were found in the census records.

The authors have the family group sheets for all the generations which are in this book. If someone wants printed copies of them, we would be happy to provide them at cost.
